To believe is to be drawn. Hence he admonishes those who have been aroused to believe in God to ask for the gift of faith.

-St. Francis de Sales

LISTENING AND RESPONDING

There are three interwoven themes in today's readings: listening to God, faith vs. good works, and losing our life in order to find it. How are they related?

The Suffering Servant of Isaiah undergoes much distress and ridicule, but is able to bear it because he has listened to the promptings of God day after day. The psalm tells us that God listens, too. God hears our prayers for help and is always ready to save us. As our faith deepens, so does our desire to do the works of justice and charity that build up the reign of God. God directs our actions in ways we often cannot see, and we don't always see the results. We are called upon in faith to trust that what we do is enough, and that willingness to listen to God's promptings will lead us in the right way.

GROWING DISCIPLES

This column is written by fellow parishioners with the hope that it will help you on your journey to grow as disciples of Jesus.

THE FALL

God lovingly made me.

He alone knows what's best for me.

But sadly, we reject His plan for us and His goodness.

Sin breaks that right order, that wonderful relationship
We can have between the Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

What parent of a runaway child wouldn't move heaven and earth for a chance at reunion?

THEOLOGY 101: TAKING ANOTHER LOOK AT THE CHURCH AND POLITICS

Father Louis J. Cameli, May 2012

Archdiocese of Chicago Office for Formation and Mission

Introduction

Is the Catholic Church too political? Or, is it not political enough? What exactly is the relationship between the Church and politics? If Catholics depend on ordinary print and broadcast media for their information, they will not have a complete or accurate take on this important relationship. On the other hand, official church documents can be daunting to comprehend and digest. Besides the difficulty of getting accurate information, there is another important and practical complication.

Many Catholics, even very traditional ones, have a very negative reaction to any hint that someone including a bishop or a group of bishops is going to tell them how to vote. American Catholics are very American in their sense of independence as citizens and as participants in democratic processes.

Tensions between religion and politics will probably mount with an approaching presidential election. They have already escalated with the recent Health and Human Services mandate for so-called "reproductive health services" attached to insurance plans of the new health care bill. Among others, Catholic bishops have correctly, in my estimation, categorized the mandate as a serious restriction of religious freedom. (See, for example: Our First, Most Cherished Liberty: A Statement on Religious Liberty of the ad hoc Committee for Religious Liberty of the US Conference of Catholic Bishops. Available at:

<http://www.usccb.org/issues-and-action/religious-liberty/our-first-most-cherished-liberty.cfm>

In this swirl of theoretical and practical issues, we do well to step back and identify a few simple principles and facts.

Is there a Catholic vote?

Pollsters and sociologists like to identify "the Catholic vote." In fact, there is no shared or prescribed Catholic vote for a specific candidate or on a specific issue. There is, however, a Catholic vision of the world rooted in faith, a vision which shapes or ought to shape how Catholics participate in a democracy as citizens and as public servants. The heart of that vision centers on the God-given dignity of each individual, our connection or solidarity with each other, and our shared commitment to fostering life, justice, peace, and reconciliation among all people. The Catholic vision of humanity is especially sensitive to those who are vulnerable, marginalized, and neglected. The Catholic vision often appears to be contrary to many currents of contemporary culture, because it assumes the great dignity and high destiny of all human beings from conception to natural death. The Catholic vision is different because it looks at the world critically both through the lens of faith and the lens of reason.

How is the Catholic voice frequently and incorrectly perceived in the public forum?

There are at least four significant misperceptions of how Catholic social teaching relates to public and political life in the United States. The first misperception suggests that the Church speaking through the bishops is trying to impose a program or exercise social control on other citizens. The second misperception sees in the bishops and their social teaching nothing more than institutional self-interest riding roughshod over other citizens. A third misperception identifies the bishops and the Catholic Church more generally as a special interest group that is seeking to profit from special protections and favorable conditions at a political and economic cost to other citizens. A final misperception identifies the Catholic Church and her leadership as attempting to claim exceptional or selective status in the nation, again at a cost to other citizens.

These misperceptions are often embedded in the public discourse found in print and electronic media. They must be identified as misperceptions. They do not match the history of the participation of American Catholics in civic life nor Catholics' aspirations to contribute to our nation in the future. Far from being competitors with the interests of other citizens, American Catholics have contributed significant social and economic capital to the United States, especially through church institutions dedicated to education, health care, and social services. Interestingly, in the current debates and commentaries, no one mentions these positive contributions which have made a great difference in our overall quality of life.

What, in fact, does the Catholic Church want when she proclaims her social teaching and vindicates her rights in American society?

In a word, the Church wants freedom, just as other groups and individuals want and have a right to freedom in this nation. That freedom, in the context of Catholic social teaching, has a threefold direction:

- the freedom to profess the faith and offer worship;
- the freedom to practice faith or, in other words, live it out in the world;
- the freedom to contribute to the good of society in various ways, especially as this has taken shape in the United States primarily through education, health care, and social services.

What is the fundamental assumption that Catholics hold as they participate in the life of the nation?

The fundamental assumption is that faith shapes life, not just a portion or a compartment of life but the whole of life. Catholics cannot bracket their faith. It is an indispensable source of social values and social vision. Their commitment as believers and as citizens is an integral and integrated commitment. Following the words of Jesus, Catholics want to be salt, light, and leaven in this world.

Is there some follow-up for these reflections?

A good follow-up would be the United States Bishops' document Forming Consciences for Faithful Citizenship. (Available at: <http://www.usccb.org/issues-and-action/faithful-citizenship/forming-consciences-for-faithful-citizenship-document.cfm>)

We are grateful for your contributions to support these children and for giving them a chance for a bright new future.
